

Outline for Panel on Scholarship at the
AALS Workshop for New Law Teachers
June 28, 2008

Angela J. Davis
Professor of Law, American University Washington College of Law

- I. Finding Time to Write
  - A. Make writing the priority
  - B. Schedule Time for Writing (and be inflexible about it)
  - C. Schedule Enough Time (It takes more time than you think)
  - D. Find the best space and location

- II. How to Get Started
  - A. The importance of outlines and introductions
  - B. Don't get bogged down with hunting and gathering
  - C. Talk to other scholars (in your law school and elsewhere)
  - D. Share drafts (but not with everybody!)

- III. Creating a Scholarly Agenda
  - A. Introducing future articles in the first piece
  - B. The second article

- C. Symposium articles
-
- IV. Know Your Law School
    - A. Placement expectations
    - B. Requirements for promotion and tenure – quality and quantity
    - C. Promotion and tenure reviews
-
- V. The Pros and Cons of a Few Common Practices
    - A. Co-authoring
    - B. Writing on lots of different topics
    - C. Publishing in different forms and formats