2020 ANNUAL MEETING – WASHINGTON

Rising Tensions Among Corporate Stakeholders
January 2, 2020
3:30 PM to 5:15 PM
Delaware Suite A (Lobby Level)

According to folks familiar with the facts (FFFs), the program can be described as follows:

Tensions among corporate stakeholders are rising. Managers and shareholders continue to battle for primacy as power tilts toward shareholders with the ongoing rise of institutional investors. Formerly passive investors are choosing voice over exit more often than ever before. Proxy advisory firms are influencing shareholder voting, attracting opposition from corporate lobbyists. Other stakeholders seek greater influence too. Amazon’s dust-up in New York City shows the influence of communities and the resurgence of popular movements. Exxon’s recent experience over climate change illustrates the power of environmental concerns even for investors in traditional energy companies. Labor is flexing its muscles through pension funds. Technology provides new ways for stakeholders to coordinate their activities and increase their influence. This panel explores the resulting tensions, their implications for corporate governance, and the mechanisms for mediating them.

Note that the program is co-sponsored by the Sections on Agency, Partnership, LLC’s and Unincorporated Associations, the Section on Contracts, the Section on Securities Regulation, and the Section on Transactional Law & Skills – in other words pretty much everyone who matters.

The program will feature paper presentations by Sean J. Griffith, Fordham, and Sung Eun (Summer) Kim, Irvine, both of which/whom were selected from a call for papers. Speakers also include Stephen Bainbridge, UCLA, David Webber, Boston University, and Cynthia Williams, Osgoode Hall. The program will be moderated by Andrew Tuch, Washington University (St. Louis).

Abstracts for the papers to be presented follow below.

As for the much anticipated and always exciting business meeting, you should have received a message from our fearless leader naming the nominees who have now been elected.

The nominated and now elected chair-elect is Jessica Erickson, Richmond.

The nominated and now elected new members of the Executive Committee (whose terms will expire as of the 2023 annual meeting) are:

- Gina-Gail Fletcher, Indiana
- Manning Warren III, Louisville

In addition, Afra Afsharipour, UC Davis, whose current term expires at the 2020 meeting was elected to serve out the term of Benjamin Means, South Carolina, through the 2021 meeting.

Note that the leadership roster that follows does not reflect the results of the recent virtual business meeting. Rather, roster is current as of going to press. We here at The Red Herring are not sure whether terms expire at the beginning or end of the annual meeting. We presume they expire at the end of the meeting since the tradition until recently was to hold a live business meeting at the end of the program. (Admittedly, one business meeting was held at the beginning of an annual meeting to avoid a looming contest.) We are also a bit confused about how the Executive Committee has grown from the traditional ten members with staggered three-year terms to the apparent eleven members now. Just sayin'.

In addition to the regular annual meeting, SOBA will sponsor New Voices in Business Law on Friday, January 3 from 3:30 PM to 5:15 PM. This program is co-sponsored with the Section on Financial Institutions & Consumer Financial Services and the Section on Securities Regulation and will feature works in progress from junior scholars selected from calls for papers. Authors include Will Clayton, Mihailis Diamantis, Cathy Hwang (with Michael Jennejohn), Manesh Patel, Will Moon, and Gregory Shill. The program will be moderated by Andrew Verstein, Wake Forest and will feature numerous senior commentators as described more fully below.

Other programs co-sponsored by SOBA include: Immediate Challenges in Consumer Financial Protection, Thursday, January 2 from 1:30 PM to 3:15 PM (with the Section on Financial Institutions and Consumer Financial Services, the Section on Commercial & Consumer Law, the Section on Securities Regulation, and the Section on Transactional Law and Skills), and Markets and Regulation: The Shifting Context of Transactional Practice, Saturday, January 4 from 8:30 AM to 10:15 AM (with the Section on Transactional Law & Skills and the Section on Securities Regulation). Descriptions of both programs are included below.
ABSTRACTS FOR PAPER PRESENTATIONS

Opt-In Stewardship: Toward an Optimal Delegation of Mutual Fund Voting Authority

Sean Griffith

This article offers a theory of mutual fund voting to answer when mutual funds should vote on behalf of their investors and when they should not. It argues that voting authority for mutual funds ought to depend upon: (1) whether the fund possesses a comparative information advantage, and (2) the ability of the fund to assume a common investor purpose. The strongest case for mutual fund voting is one in which high-quality information is produced and the fund is able to assume a common investor purpose. The case for mutual fund voting is weaker when low quality information is produced or where funds cannot assume a common investor purpose.

Applying this theory answers whether and how mutual funds should vote on recurring issues. Mutual funds ought to vote on "contests" — that is, proxy fights and M&A — because meaningful information is produced and because the fund can assume a common interest on the part of its investors. By the same token, funds ought not to exercise voting discretion over environmental, social and governance issues. With respect to environmental and social issues, meaningful information is not produced nor can mutual funds assume a common investor purpose. With respect to governance issues, although funds can assume a unified investor purpose, they do not have adequate information to decide the matter. As a result, mutual funds should follow the voting recommendations of unconflicted managers, as will typically be the case with regard to environmental and social proposals. However, when management is conflicted, as will often be the case with regard to governance proposals, funds should abstain from voting altogether.

This analysis provides a clear rubric for ensuring that mutual fund voting serves investor interests. However, the possibility remains that mutual funds may use voting to pursue their own interests rather than those of their investors. Regulators should therefore act to reset the default allocations of voting authority between mutual funds and their investors.
Consumer Primary Alternative

Summer Kim

The doctrine of shareholder value provides that the purpose of public corporations is to maximize shareholder wealth. This Article challenges the doctrine of shareholder value by identifying a growing subset of contemporary firms for which a consumer primacy alternative (i.e., the view that the primary purpose of the firm is to ensure consumer satisfaction, rather than shareholder wealth) is more appropriate. These firms are referred to here as “high consumer orientation firms” and are firms whose consumers provide the critical inputs and whose consumers’ interests are most aligned with maximizing the long-term value of the firm. As an example, a consumer of a crowdfunded product does not take shares but provides capital and product design advice during the early and critical stages of the product’s development. A consumer using a ride share app makes significant contributions to building the platform and provides real-time ratings and feedback regarding their experience which is used to incentivize desirable behavior within the platform. A purchaser of a token in an initial coin offering (ICO) purchases a medium of exchange that can only be used on a particular network, with the value of the token determined by the network’s ultimate success. In each of these examples, consumers take on roles which are the functional equivalents of the characteristics that the doctrine of shareholder value has relied upon to justify the law’s treatment of shareholders as insiders, owners, and principals of firms. Based on this observation, I argue that the legal status of consumers in high consumer orientation firms should be adjusted to provide their consumers with rights and obligations (such as the right to vote, standing to sue, and participation rights) that are more commensurate with their contributions. This consumer-oriented approach to corporate governance for high consumer orientation firms is expected to produce extra outputs and outcomes that are not achievable under the doctrine of shareholder value.

This program considers immediate challenges in consumer financial protection and how best to meet them. Topics may include challenges that could lead to financial crises, result in consumer harm, or curb economic growth. The program spans banking, securities, fintech, and insurance. Themes may include behavioral and other justifications for regulation, regulatory tools and techniques, consumer remedies, and measures of regulatory impact. The program offers a chance for scholars and practitioners of consumer financial protection, whatever their economic, political, or philosophical views, to share their work and ideas at a time of significant change.

Economic globalization has brought in its wake a movement toward the privatization of governance and the governmentalization of key factors in transnational global production. States project authority in markets through state owned enterprises, sovereign wealth funds, and development facilities. Enterprises and civil society have undertaken greater responsibility for the human rights and sustainability impacts of their operations as international soft law regimes have blossomed. This panel considers the applicability of the three pillars of democracy—law, representation, and knowledge—to globalization and governance from a rights holder perspective. Should governmentalization of economic activity also bring the protections of democratic structures and principles? How might those be incorporated within the transnational or supranational space where these activities are undertaken? Should the increasing focus on the rights holder in current efforts to manage substantive rights and remedial mechanisms give rise to a duty to faithfully represent?

In late 2017, Congress passed a major piece of tax legislation. Since then, the Treasury Department and IRS worked to implement this legislation, and in 2019, individual taxpayers went through the first filing season under the new law. This program will draw on experiences and discuss issues related to the new law's implementation and administration. The panel includes people who played key roles in the IRS's Tax Reform Implementation Office, IRS Office of Chief Counsel, OIRA, and Taxpayer Advocate Service. Topics discussed will include the roles of different government players; process for promulgating regulations; decisions along the way, including the prioritization of topics for guidance; questions that remain unresolved; how the administration of the new law impacted taxpayers; obstacles faced during the first filing season; opportunities for improving the new law's administration; and what to expect moving forward.

Markets and Regulation: The Shifting Context of Transactional Practice

Transactional Law and Skills, Co-Sponsored by Business Associations and Securities Regulation

This session will explore the changing regulatory context of transactional legal practice, which is rapidly evolving in response to new innovations and challenges across a range of markets. Emerging issues range from privacy law and cybersecurity, to national security concerns, antitrust, and international trade and investment, to the prospect of new regulatory responses to climate change and other environmental threats. The forms these regulatory responses take are also diverse, including not only traditional public regulation, but also private governance, which draws upon the efforts of NGOs, trade associations, and international organizations. In addition to paper presentations, the program will feature a panel focusing on how to incorporate regulatory concepts and issues across the transactional curriculum, including in clinics and other experiential courses, as well as in doctrinal courses.

Under the Trump administration, regulatory agencies have increasingly relied on economics to provide guidance on consumer protection policies. The dominance of Republican Attorneys General has reinforced that tendency at the state level. At the same time, behavioral economics has bid for greater influence over consumer protection policy versus traditional economic approaches. In addition, new forms of communication have challenged traditional rationales for consumer protection by reducing traditional information asymmetries and credence goods (such as traditionally justified practices like occupational licensing), while revealing rent-seeking motivations behind many purported consumer protection laws. This session will review economic approaches to consumer protection as well as examine behavioral law and economics as an alternative approach. Topics will include consumer credit regulation, advertising, licensing, and FinTech innovation.

Legal rules that create private causes of actions can be sorted into two kinds: rules that entitle the claimant to an injunction and rules that entitle the claimant to damages. The first kind of rule is associated with property rights and hence is called "property rules." The second is associated with tort liability or contractual liability and is called "liability rules." This panel discussion focuses on whether the core intellectual property law areas, Copyrights, Patents, Trademarks, and Trade Secrets, are correctly conceived of as Tort/Law regimes and what it means to conceive acts of infringement as strict liability torts.

Mutual funds, particularly index funds, increasingly find themselves in a position to influence the governance of the companies in which they invest. Accordingly, campaigners of every sort—from hedge fund activists to advocates for environmental and social causes—now lobby mutual funds for voting support. But how should mutual funds wield their power in corporate governance? This panel will discuss the nature of mutual fund investing, the shift to indexing, its impact on the market, and how mutual funds ought to exercise their influence over the companies in which they invest.

This program will explore decisions and strategies for choice of business entity. As unincorporated business entities have matured and those who use them have learned their advantages and disadvantages, key decisions about choice of entity have changed in important and interesting ways. In addition, accelerating advances in technology promise to play surprising roles in the formation and operation of unincorporated firms.

Since its creation in 1934, the United States Securities and Exchange Commission has played a leading role in regulating the capital markets and providing investor protection. This panel will explore the state of the SEC by examining its current regulatory and enforcement efforts and by discussing the policies that underlie them.

The Section held a virtual business meeting prior to the Annual Meeting.
